Look at a US Senator call everyone who attended a World Series game a lobbyist. Maybe @tedcruz does that because literally the only people he sees in Washington are special interest lobbyists who line his campaign coffers. You should get out more Senator.

Oh btw, Robert Mueller was an abject failure. In light of the Ukraine scandal, I have no doubt Trump and his campaign actively colluded with Russia.

Just a small anecdote on the Dem primary and the prevalence of identity over ideology: I was in a group of women the other night, all white women over 50, who were struggling to choose between Warren and Klobuchar. Definitely not scientific by any stretch.

Bernie seems like he'd be a blast to have a beer with. Don't feel like I'd have as good of a time with Warren.

Just out of curiosity what is the point of this impeachment? Today, after many weeks of hearings, every R voted against it. If you aren't convincing any of them by now, why keep proceeding?

No, his approval numbers really aren't up. A month ago his approval was slightly higher. Disapproval almost exactly the same. His disapproval is higher now than all of 2019 except in Jan during the shutdown/fight over funding the wall.

Don't forget to vote, because local elections can control how your city is managed, how your elections are run, what voice your county gets in state matters, etc.

Something unique about this Dem primary, and really under-appreciated, is that the modern Democratic Party has never had so much immediate nostalgia for its most recent president.

2004: Clinton was still a problematic figure post-Lewinsky.
1984: Carter was a failure. (1/2)

And Clinton was actually seen as a key voice for Obama in 2012. Still, I think Dave's right: not the same as with Obama. Even before Clinton/Carter, Johnson was repudiated, Kennedy dead, Truman was actually unpopular leaving office. FDR dead, etc. etc. etc.

Btw, Dave, Clinton left the hospital to do a major rally for Kerry with almost 100k people in Philly. That helped Kerry win the state against the tide of anti-gay

Gore accounts for significant amount of this. Even with impeachment, Clinton was still v v popular and Gore for various reasons choose not to lean into that. And that helped set the tone.

It would be really useful to access the alternate dimension where Sanders was the 2016 nominee. In this dimension, Clinton was the nominee, did not run on a Medicare for All, and fumbled away Michigan.

Just FYI we have a Democratic Governor in Michigan. You can see what she ran on in 2018. This might be a helpful exercise.

If I am not mistaken, more candidates who won in 2018 didn't run on MFA.

There is a current Democratic Governor in Michigan. Folks can check out what she campaigned on in 2018. It might be instructive on, you know, winning a statewide race.

I don't know who needs this lesson to countravene the "scary Socialism will take your choice" Palin approach that we heard in 2009 with the ACA, but your insurance can deny any coverage based on cost NOW--& does every hour of every day. #M4A insures everyone. THAT is the lesson.

> Mia Brett @QueenMab87
> I don't know who needs this lesson but a govt run healthcare system will still deny coverage for procedures or treatments based on cost. That's never going away

The British and Canadian systems decide on limits of care. This is a fact. I mean, it's not even controversial.

Of course a private insurance system also denies coverage for procedures or treatments based on cost. It's kind of obvious that that's necessary. How can you do anything without regard for cost?

Trump is beating Biden, Bernie, and Warren among white non college voters by the same margin that he beat Hillary by in 2016. Can we go ahead and say this never was or is about economic anxiety. It is about culture. And about anger over a changing face of America.

We beat him by picking the candidate that gets the most votes in the states we need. It's an axiom but it's true. Dems pick their candidate but the country chooses the president. Therefore taking into concern the views of non Dems is quite rational.

I definitely think we would have done better with a candidate who was more clear on the key issue of 2004, Iraq. And many made the argument in 2008 that Obama wasn't electable because he didn't conform to some mythical candidate midwestern voters want. The same thing we hear now.

This is a false choice that does a disservice to the public. There are multiple routes to ensuring everyone has health care. Many European countries have universal private insurance, highly regulated. The idea that single payer is the only way to universal is simply wrong.

Right, but he'll just move the goalposts. They have no principles other than a sense of entitlement to Rule. Everything is in-the-moment transactional opportunism.

This. He's going to turn out his base. We need to both turn out our base and pull persuadable voters to vote Dem. Any Dem candidate who has a strategy for one and not the other is vulnerable to failing.

Turnout looks to be higher than in 2015 in many counties so far.

Nicholas is the first county to be done. It's small, & had 1500 voters in 2015. 2,300 today. Similar dynamic elsewhere.

I believe it stood at around 400 nationally after the 2018 election. I'm assuming it's up to ~450 or so after last night.

FWIW, it looks like one of them was in Mississippi last night.

Here you go...this is for 2018: ballotpedia.org/State_legislat…

"Democrats gained a net 308 seats in the 2018 elections, Republicans lost a net 294 seats, and third party and independent candidates lost a net 14 seats. At least one flip occurred in every state except LA, MS, NJ & VA"

What an embarrassment. I'm neutral in the race but this is pathetic. Some at The Nation have run interference for Trump on Russia. Now they run interference for him in the Dem primary. Every Dem candidate should condemn this.

There are candidates who have been making a theory of their case that running on a certain type of platform will activate a massive network of non-voters.

Others have made the case to rebuild the Obama coalition.

Based on this analysis, it's clear the former is not viable

There's a lot of sexist attacks against a lot of different women candidates but some of the men who are defending women candidates now sat silently during the last presidential cycle as a woman got mauled. I see you. Your defense is a political tactic, not allyship.

Avoiding moving the party to the right to woo people on the fence about voting for Trump and instead rallying the base of younger voters and more progressive Dems might help. Maybe stop conceding to the conservatives before Dems are even in office like we have been for decades.

Good for you. But even if the quote had been accurate I still think we need to get out of this mode of dragging he candidates for perceived slights to Obama. Obama himself criticized the Clintons in 2008. We need to give candidates leeway to define themselves against the past.

This is filled with lies. The media should not report on it without noting it's a lie.

> Donald J. Trump @realDonaldTrump
> Shifty Adam Schiff will only release doctored transcripts. We haven't even seen the documents and are restricted from (get this) having a lawyer. Republicans should put out their own transcripts! Schiff must testify as to why he MADE UP a statement from me, and read it to all!

So much of how the media covers Trump is done so poorly.

Quality follow up questions and polite, professional, and firm challenges need to be made to him in real time.

There's a term for these voters.

Oh look. A supporter of Bernie Sanders attacking a Democrat. This is seriously dangerous. We know Trump is in the White House and attacking Dems is doing Trump's bidding. I hope Senator Sanders repudiates these attacks in 2019. twitter.com/davidsirota/st …

Every time they talk about health care, touch on human dignity, engage people about what families need to survive and thrive—we must do a better job making it explicit, but that's us talking faith, the real kind.

Something to watch about Patrick: Of the four governors who've announced for president (him, Bullock, Inslee, Hickenlooper) he's the only one who had a Democratic legislative majority for all eight years. What did it achieve? That's not part of the early messaging!

We have to take into consideration the context and positions held by individual candidates if using this standard. It is obviously more difficult to have a record of clear achievements if a candidate has been a member of Congress as opposed being in an executive position.

I still don't think this is helpful. A candidate shouldn't define themselves thru the prism of their opponent.

American voters want vision, hope, & a can-do attitude. Obama proved that. Republicans market hate. Democrats market hope.

63M voted for Trump bc he told them he was going to give them jobs & make their healthcare better... plus they were told Hillary was ■ crook... plus the racism backlash from O.

So he gave them hope & hate in equal measure. It worked.

He also gave them a TV personality who speaks in one syllable words, disdains government, disses intellectual curiosity, exemplifies nouveau riche consumerism. In short, he made a vast number of people feel their own reluctant bargain with mediocrity might still have payoff.

These people weren't even in to the idea of impeachment until they realized it was something they could attack Pelosi over. Now that she proved them wrong, they are pretending they were right about her all along.

But others who thought the Dems should have impeached by Feb 15th. I liked when they would argue that an impeachment inquiry is a higher level than standard Congressional oversight so if it became an inquiry the administration would be forced to turn over all requested docs Really all the people who've attacked Pelosi, from all sides, are pathetic. She's the perfect warrior against Trump.

Let's do this to every single GOP House member who puts their party over country. This is quite the incentive structure we can create for Republican House members who put fealty to Trump over the Constitution.

This is such an interesting tweet. Part of the reason that Democratic Party politics are so confusing is that the two most prominent Democratic socialist, working inside the party, are stronger extollers of the history modern US liberalism than many liberals themselves are.

Bernie Sanders @BernieSanders

"It's time that we become the party of FDR again.

It's time for us to become the party of the Civil Rights Act again.

The hard left of the time called FDR a millionaire sellout. They called him a slick politician. It's bizarre how ahistorical this is.

FDR would be a billionaire today. You think he's be accepted on here?

My meta point is that I think liberals hating on the left and left hating on Elizabeth Warren, ffs, are sectarianisms which are damaging to building a winning coalition. The party is moving left and will continue to do so. Biden today is way to the left of 2008. Libs and Lefties

I'm not the person who said it's time for Democrats to be for Civil rights again, which, if you think about it, is kind of incredible.

And so I broadly agree that sectarian fighting is stupid. And counterproductive.

I think the way to view her remarks is as aspirational. She's calling on Dem voters to hold fast to the best aspects of the party. If that's sounds a bit unfair sometimes, that's the trade off for inspiring young voters.

I guess the most ahistorical counter factual of all is to imagine how FDR would be viewed today. The closest analogy would be Ted Kennedy—multi-millionaire, but rock solid liberal. He had lots of personal problems, but his politics would be to the left of most Dem candidates.

I'm seriously unclear as to what you are even trying to say. So AOC, Democrat in good standing, praises FDR. And your point is that—socialists would hate him today? Is that what you're trying to say? But she worked for another millionaire liberal, Ted Kennedy. So maybe not.

I respect you but you & I both know that the hard left of the time called FDR a millionaire sellout for the ruling class.Glad lots of people like FDR, I'm glad AOC talks about him. Just think you should recognize if he were alive today he'd be attacked from certain quarters

I guess the most ahistorical counter factual of all is to imagine how FDR would be viewed today. The closest analogy would be Ted Kennedy—multi-millionaire, but rock solid liberal. He had lots of personal problems, but his politics would be to the left of most Dem candidates.

You and I have a very different view of how Ted Kennedy would be cowed today in some quarters.

I think FDR would look at the last century and what the Democratic Party has actually done, who it has nominated, and think a statement like "it's time for the Democratic Party to be for civil rights again" is frankly ridiculous. Saying falsehoods is inspiring is not an excuse.

In politics, walls often seem impenetrable until they crack. Only then do you see that it was always a facade.

We may see more cracks this week, as the GOP House is starting to telegraph to reporters their own growing panic.

Thing that is startling to me is that of LI the concerns listed in the article, none of them are about Trump's actual behavior. Just mostly about how it will be perceived. Evidently none of them care that he did it, they just don't want it to affect their campaigns.

So now it's "Bribery."

Who did the president "Bribe" and what did he get for it? Be specific.

The truth is that "Bribery" is a made-up, poll tested charge without any factual basis in this case.

No it's not. No president at this point can "unite" the country or "heal" the nation's divisions. It's pabalum. We can strive for something like that, but it simply can't be achieved under current political and social reality. Anyone saying they'll do it is being deceitful.

if anything, the multi-party system in Israel makes for a weak PM. And his inability to form a coalition in the last two elections (and indictments today!) pretty clearly demonstrates Israel is far from an authoritarian state.

Everyone heard this quote; it's viral. I said it on TV, in print, it's on protest signs, there's a T-shirt line with my face and the quote (not made by me!) etc. It's not about knowing there's a crime syndicate, but CARING. Those who opposed impeachment or indictment didn't care.

The candidate who can do the best in Texas is the candidate that can do the best in all the other states.

The question is this.

Who is that candidate?

Neera's problem is...the leak told inconvenient truths about her, and the Hillary campaign.

If it had done the same about Trump...she would have been fine with it. Did she ever complain about the Access Hollywood tape?

Thanks for proving my point. This is exactly what Russia wanted - false narratives spread like wildfire from emails stolen, not by whistleblower but a foreign adversary. And you're falling for it 3 years later. This is what Giuliani did with Ukraine & you've joined.

If that were the case, we would've printed far more information that was available.

But we didn't do that.

The story in question was narrowly tailored and concerned what the DCCC thought of some of its own candidates in Florida

But, Trump spawn should be aware 5 year statute of limits.

Fun segment - thanks for having me on @KatyTurNBC and @TheLastWord

The president is now trying to distance himself from Rudy Giuliani by claiming that he didn't know what Giuliani was doing with Ukraine. But all evidence contradicts that claim. @KatyTurNBC discusses with @BillKristol, @JillWineBanks, and @neeratanden.

Neither of you needs me to tell you this but maybe some passerby does, so: "unlikeable" isn't really a thing; it's just an excuse people use when they dislike someone but don't want to own their preferences. And that often says more about them than about anyone else.

Elon Musk is damaging the night sky. His satellites interfere with astronomers' observations of stars and potentially harmful near-Earth asteroids, leaving streaks on images. No regulations require him to fix the problem. Soon it may be unfixable.

It was Doral. The bedbugs at Doral would be very angry that you did not mention them. They are the only recognition that money losing property has had lately. Trump had to pay a customer to settle out of court. The guy posted pictures of his Doral bedbug bites on twitter.

...but isn't that effectively a distinction without a difference? How did the GOP inventing "welfare queens" out of thin air, for example, not target both theoretical bad actors and the idea that social programs could cover "people who don't need it?"

social welfare policies like AFDC/TANF are by definition not universal because they cover only low-income families. The GOP argument was that people cheat the programs - which was always BS. Not that they shouldn't cover poor people. Big difference.

That's because it's an argument about who does and doesn't deserve services. When you make an argument that something we all agree everyone should have should exclude a group of people, that argument cuts both ways. Which is why it shouldn't be invoked w rich people either.

Are we really pretending that millionaires don't send their kids to elite institutions, and won't continue to do so, no matter what free college is available?
The conversation on this is bizarre.
How many millionaire's kids are we even talking about that it even matters?

You're conflating two different things- bad actors who use the policy when they shouldn't. And policies that cover people who don't need it.Saying you don't want middle class people to pay for billionaires' education is not the same as saying EITC is defrauded by some poor people

And no Democrat should be shooting down universal policies on the basis that some people might end up paying for something that could potentially also benefit a rich person. They're ostensibly paying into the system too.

If this is the outlook then it has to consider which stances are already crowded. A pivot to the center could have more to do with lack of enthusiasm for candidates in that lane than overall popular support for centrist positions.

In polls it would be from 'independents' or what have you but among those are many already in center who may not feel so committed to Biden. A pivot to the left hasn't worked for those who've tried earlier because Warren and Sanders have committed base and own that lane.

If there was ■ candidate in center now that had popularity of Obama then a shift to center by other candidates would be equally ineffective, imo.

Any candidate can be criticized. And some actions-like defending a dictator who slaughters children-is beyond the pale. But the personal assaults on candidates reminds me of 2016. The mainstream Dems running are not equal to Trump, none of them. Try to remember that.

Neera Tanden ✓ @neeratanden · 3h
I'm not a big Sanders Stan but I will support him if he's the nominee.

People, Trump's re-election is an existential threat. If you do not think the GOP is watching these attacks and will amplify them in the general, you're wrong.

Neera Tanden ✓ @neeratanden · 3h
Finally, if you're assaulting candidate in my mentions, I will block. You can do that on your own timeline.

Again, I want to echo and underscore Neera's point. The NYT story mischaracterized the meeting, lumped it incorrectly with other events and efforts. Sadly, others have used that error to promote precisely the kind of divisiveness we're committed to preventing.

Neera is absolutely correct. The purpose of the meeting was actually to discuss how to maintain Dem unity throughout the campaign and to ensure a victory. It was explicitly not in support of (or opposed to) any candidate. And Bernie's name never came up in the conversation.

This incident has long stood out as key in the politicization of DOJ, and the fact that a central figure can maintain her wall of silence while transitioning into newsgathering at CNN says a lot about how unseriously elite institutions take this moment.

Frankly they all stole their health care ideas from me.

> Charles #GetCovered-ba @charles_gaba

You know what's odd is I actually worked on legislation that got 20 million people health care. It didn't talk about it. It did it. Not perfect but I've met people who've told me they are alive today because of the ACA. But really, please keep tweeting.

He had the chance when he had the supermajorty to push single payer and he chose not to as a way of compromising with Republicans. How'd that work out for us?

How's Neera's strategy working? We incrementally make progress sanctioned by special interests then get steamrolled

Hey Neera, where's the "This is hogwash, people in Vermont run as Dems if they want to." reply you deleted?

Because EXACTLY. They run as Dems - just like Sanders is doing.

Anyone get a screenshot? P sure she cited PA Repub Pat Toomey as an ex of a "real Dem" from VT too lol.

We only have a few weeks left before the voting counts

For me, I can't stand by and not discuss the facts that should be considered by voters

Republicans waited until it was too late before discussing Trump.

It isn't enough to just select a presidential nominee who can beat Trump. Nearly every nominee in the race (and many of those who just left) can do that. The economy didn't help Trump in 2018 and won't help now.

We need someone who will address inequities and bigotry.

Based on history. Back in 2016, nearly every Republican candidate was capable of beating Hillary based on polling. Only one of those candidates didn't make that cut: The guy who is now President of the United States.

RiShawn Biddle @dropoutnation · 2h
If polling shows that nearly every candidate can beat the other nominee, chances are that all of the candidates can. It's just a matter of the cutdown process.

In any case, Neera, your argument about criticizing candidates doesn't stand any scrutiny whatsoever.

Grinnell is a college town; Buttigieg is belatedly getting the treatment that bedeviled O'Rourke. He would hit campuses and encounter young left wing organizers with questions about his donors and why he could be trusted on climate.

This is complete BS. I've said a million times I will support whoever the nominee is.

Sirota reported on his fundraising and his voting record for The Guardian. It was totally clean piece. He had an impressive career as a journalist, then got into politics, where he'd gotten his start. That's happened often throughout journalism history.

Tweeters are now gleefully attacking the staff of candidates. Some misogynists are going after their past relationships. That is obviously insane. I am asking people to step out of that level of insanity and come up for air.

CeeGee @igbtcg · 3h
I assume you are talking about Lis Smith and, as the comms director tweeting out attacks at a woman candidate and driving Pete's message, she is fair game. Who you hire says a lot about you and he hired the IDC lady. That shows me who he is and NO

I have to guard myself against "crowdsmanship" in two ways: Biden and Sanders don't really need huge crowds. In Iowa, Sanders got a huge one with AOC but generally gets fewer people than Buttigieg. Most Sanders voters know him already, though, and don't need to head to a rally.

$3 million a day are spent in an Afghan district the size of a US county and if you criticize it you "hate the troops."

Sounds like the party of hypocrisy I know.

On impeachment, the GOP has a con. It is to both obstruct the investigation and then claim insufficient evidence. It's as if the mob called for due process after silencing the witnesses. Fortunately sufficient evidence is on the record. But people who fall for this con are dupes.

How are the Democrats as unfavorable as Trump? People have seriously lost their minds. This is like 2016 when people claimed Hillary was worse than Trump. She wasn't and none of these people are, either.

This is maddening.

Seriously, what ■ wrong with headline writers today? Trump pretended to support Medicare Rx negotiation in 2016 and now has brazenly broken that promise. In no sense was it ever his "idea"--it's something Dems have supported since at least 2003.

Everything since November 8, 2016 has been maddening. Literally. Please keep reminding us to stay focused on the big picture, which has to be holding the House and taking the Senate - along with electing a Democratic president. Yes, I'm very bummed that my candidate is out.

And no, I'm not super enthusiastic about anyone left in the field. But we are in a world of hurt with an immoral, incompetent president and an entirely complicit GOP. We are losing the courts at a startling rate, while ignorance & hate & division are ruling the day.

Not sure what Twitter has to do with polling. Not much. I think the MSM framing of women candidates as bad, ignoring POC candidates and propping up candidates who can't be the 2024 incumbent are the real issue. Twitter didn't drive Harris and Gillibrand out. Misogynist media did.

Some will no doubt point out here that, if Democrats don't beat Trump now, the party won't be able to govern at all. But a weak, four-year presidency that starts in 2020 might actually be worse for progressive priorities in the long term than a stronger presidency that begins in 2024. Democrats would even have a chance to pick up Senate seats running against Trump in the 2022 midterms, when the map will be much friendlier than it is in 2020.

They also gained 1000 seats between 2006 and 2008, so this supposed nationwide rejection of liberalism was basically just a return to 2005 levels.

All this 1000 seat stuff leaves out that there are over 7000 state legislative seats, and they're not spread out equally. New Hampshire has 400 despite only having 1.5 million people. That same number in California is represented by 6 seats.

I just explained the point of the tweet, Neera. Biden brings no value added to the centrist table. He's too old, too confused, unlikely to wear well. If he had a five point margin over everybody else, I could see the calculation. But he doesn't. Understand now?

Impeachment is a much more severe response than voting out Trump in 2020. How reassuring can it be for his campaign that in GA & NC 48% would impeach, 49% In WI/AZ & TX (!), 51% in MI, PA & FL. That suggests none of those states are totally safe for him & several may be uphill.

Exactly. Reality is Dems need to be at least extremely competitive in WI, FL, NC, and AZ to win, and win only one of those states. Dems also have to be competitive in GA, TX, IA, & OH to win. You can't just put all your eggs all on one state. That's not the way it works.

For those of you who think impeachment should have waited, imagine three more months of hearings like this one. Every day. The Republicans were never going to do their duty to the Constitution, and would have turned every moment into a massive shitshow until we were worn out.

I don't have any answers here, but part of the broader point, I guess, is that we are asking "campaigns" to do a lot of political work that is both necessary and vital, but not sufficent. Not a novel insight, but probably good to consider as campaign season ramps up.

You have to replace the voters you lose. In 2018, Dems made up lost voters with suburban voters. The job, it seems to me, is not to cross pressure voters who dislike Trump's attacks on democracy and various groups by making them feel economically scared.

McConnell will be in violation of 18 USC 1001(a)(2) the moment he takes that oath. He made that clear with what he told Sean Hannity last night. He will do it with impunity because he believes there are no consequences.

I hope our next Attorney General prosecutes him for it.

Something clever that the Morning Joesheviks* are doing is describing the UK election as a warning for both Sanders AND Warren. Any Sanders/Corbyn fan can tell you why Warren's "capitalism with rules" is nothing like Corbynism.

Interesting thread about how the online world can use twitter attacks on reporting to ultimately distort reality. Read through the whole thread.

And I recognize that tweeting this will mean that a virulent twitter mob may attack me. But still important to get out there.

This isn't the point being made, certainly not by me. Labour didn't lose because of people on Twitter, Labour lost because they had a mobilised, heavily-online membership backing ■ deeply unpopular candidate.

It's 80 billion, you could shut down 3 military bases and get the funding with that or tax Wall Street a tiny amount.

Donald Trump eventually may be acquitted by the Senate but Mitch McConnell has made it certain that Trump will never be exonerated. There is no possibility of exoneration in a rigged trial where McConnell is openly conspiring with the defendant.

Since the most likely positive outcome of impeachment was always for the Dems to say "true judgement of these crimes will come at the hands of voters," McConnell is basically serving that argument to them on a silver platter.

Maybe the economic policies are more basic than you think. Johnson ran on more money for schools and health care. Not reimagining or restructuring schools and health care but giving them more money. And got a lot of voters in de-industrialized UK.

Hi from Britain! Labour is ahead in several polls, it's on around 40% in a multi-party system, and if you look at Labour's European sister parties, whose leaderships advocate "Third Way" centrism, they are facing electoral annihilation, from Germany to Italy to the Netherlands.

Are polls saying only 20% of the British public thinks Corbyn would make a good prime minister wrong? Has that changed? Meanwhile here, Pelosi has higher ratings than Trump and every Dem pres candidate would beat Trump. And of course Dems won the House with large numbers.

Polls definitely change so perhaps they have from a few weeks ago. But even you can understand how people expect Labour to being doing better against the Tories in the disaster of Brexit

Owen Jones @OwenJones84 · Jan 31

Well here is a complication you do not have to deal with, which is that 52% voted for Leave in a referendum, a result which intensely divides communities. It's Brexit that gives the Tories an artificially high electoral floor because Leave voters trust them most to deliver Brexit

Interesting thread about how the online world can use twitter attacks on reporting to ultimately distort reality. Read through the whole thread.

And I recognize that tweeting this will mean that a virulent twitter mob may attack me. But still important to get out there.

Oz Katerji @OzKaterji
This isn't the point being made, certainly not by me. Labour didn't lose because of people on Twitter, Labour lost because they had a mobilised, heavily-online membership backing a deeply unpopular candidate.

Well Warren has moved from day one support. But given the asymmetric advantage the right wing noise machine has, I think the question is does the idea become more or less popular when the GOP blazes all guns on it, even if the Dem party supports.

But even there, you have to ask why Corbyn (running on a different Brexit platform) was, in fact, much more popular in '17. Same guy. As I've said, if the Grenfell fire had been a week before, rather than a week after '17 election, Corbyn, with all of his flaws, would be PM today

Yes, obviously the less they liked. But the circumstances of Brexit and running a party 70-30 remain, but weighted to leave circumstances in the North utterly different than US situation. That Corbyn was terribly unpopular is obviously true, but US context v. different.

I'm just saying that Corbyn is a limited pol, a back bencher who unexpectedly had to not fight power, but achieve it, with lots of baggage—no Dem ■ as inept. But also Labour faced enormous problems—including managing party split on Brexit/loss of Scotland— that Dems don't.

This is nonsense. Corbynism is as close to Biden, Buttigieg, Klobuchar, Warren as he is to Trump. Corbyn claimed ideological kinship to one candidate and one candidate only. Coloring them all with Corbynism is just a right wing tactic

All these candidates say they are capitalists but capitalism needs reform. Only one repudiates capitalism as did Corbyn.

Was Corbyn's defeat driven by economic policy?

Neera Tanden @neeratanden · 6h

The second highest reason Corbyn lost was people thought his economic program was unaffordable and blow up Britain's debt.

They don't have any money.
I pretty much blame Bernie Sanders for this, because he somehow convinced everyone that they should go up against Republicans without using all the money they could get just like the Republicans do.
We can't win broke.

The actual question is how M4A would do in a general election when the entire GOP is attacking it with paid advertising as well as Trump's bullhorn, even if most Dems get behind it. Would it go up or down? I don't know. I do know ACA was much more popular at this time in 2007.

So number one wasn't his policy, it was something about him personally. I'd need to know more to know if it applies to Bernie. If it were the anti-semitism you warned people about, for example—which seemed to be the issue you found disqualifying—it might not be a concern.

Exactly. You're an expert on this.

And you well know that we make forward progress in part because of pressure from the far left, while simultaneously battling obstacles from the right.

Which is the exact point I'm making and which is why we should stop demonizing the far left.

I think you're substantively wrong
1. Health care policy is uniquely subject backlash because it's so personal. Has affected waves of reform
2. I do not believe a public option is popular because of Medicare for All. I think it's popular on its own.

We just disagree here.

41% is not negligible (sorry for the double neg) but it is less popular than other options.

My ideal system has people fairly contributing (hint: the wealthier of us) to a govt controlled HC system where private companies compete for our business.

Obama backtracked on his healthcare promises once he reached office. He compromised before even reaching the bargaining table.

So rather than having died under Obama, the public option lives because the pressure for it and for more has been sustained.

I agree that there are obvious parallels to Trump and Johnson in de industrialized areas. But Andy Beshear won some of those kinds of areas - and many House Dems did better - in part by having policies on improving health care & public schools, not radically restructuring them.

One problem with Corbynism, among many, was that he created a cross pressure with those voters with seemingly unaffordable programs that were effectively painted as requiring higher taxes on everyone. Only one candidate has really done that on Dem side.

I think you're substantively wrong
1. Health care policy is uniquely subject backlash because it's so personal. Has affected waves of reform

We just disagree here.

This uses negative framing on healthcare and a positive or neutral description of the wall project. Do you think numbers would be similar if the HC q was framed as, say, "a right to health care that's free at the point of service" or the wall q spoke of "private land seizures"?

You are tweeting about a person on a candidate's staff and what party they went to. I mean, Bernie went to Liberty University and met up with Frank Graham Jr, a lunatic. I don't think we should think Bernie endorses his views. This is a toxic tweet. Really, do better.

The last few days, the @nytimes has basically adopted the view that though Trump may be the third president impeached and is facing re-election, all the risk is to the Dems and in that way, they are validating Trump's narrative.

The actual question is how M4A would do in a general election when the entire GOP is attacking it with paid advertising as well as Trump's bullhorn, even if most Dems get behind it. Would it go up or down? I don't know. I do know ACA was much more popular at this time in 2007.

We don't know either way. We do know the ACA was far more popular at this point in the cycle with little money on the air for it.

If neither Bernie or Warren win a majority or plurality of delegates but attempt to force a brokered convention where they take the nomination from the person who does, the result would be a bitterly divided party that cannot effectively compete in 2020.

Having a climate change policy at all is a pretty low approval bar. Very few of them have an ADEQUATE climate change policy that would actually work as intended.

I don't have any answers here, but part of the broader point, I guess, is that we are asking "campaigns" to do a lot of political work that is both necessary and vital, but not sufficent. Not a novel insight, but probably good to consider as campaign season ramps up.

Maybe the economic policies are more basic than you think. Johnson ran on more money for schools and health care. Not reimagining or restructuring schools and health care but giving them more money. And got a lot of voters in de-industrialized UK.

Good news/bad news for D's in new NPR/Marist/PBS poll. Many Dem policy priorities like background checks, Gov't reg of prescription drugs, even wealth tax, get majority support (59% or better), but 44% of voters said D ideas would move country in right dir/45% wrong direction.

Today lots of people who decided to run for Congress just a few short years ago - for many of them, their first runs for office - will vote to uphold the Constitution and ensure the president is not a king, despite a barrage of GOP attack ads. In this dark time there is hope.

The media paints all politics with a cynical eye. And today with Trump, there's much to be cynical about. But we lose sight of the fact that many do the right things. And in times like this, leaders are born.

Literally it's the House GOP talking points memo regurgitated by Vlad

Trump's strongest "ally" abroad is not the leader of the UK or France or Japan but the ex-KGB head of Russia....#sad

> Putin added on Thursday: "This is just the continuation of the internal political battle, one party that lost the elections, the Democrats, and are now trying to find new ways by accusing Trump of collusion with Russia. But then it turns out there was no collusion, this can't be the basis for the impeachment. Now they came up with some pressure on Ukraine, I can't know what is the [pressure] but this is up to your congressmen."

Essentially, if the public thinks Trump did something wrong and he's not punished at all, particularly in a fraud process, that will hurt him. Just as it hurt Clinton and more importantly Dems in 2000

I'm going to write a longer piece about how the most important impact on politics is whether people think Trump did something wrong, not whether they agree to the punishment.

> John Harwood @JohnJHarwood
> new NBC/WSJ poll shows 90% of Republicans oppose Trump's impeachment and removal from office over Ukraine scandal this is just a rich vintage of left bro Trump snogging, with some dopey video arcade theology thrown in, which is curious/notable given the snogger.

The richest part of this is they think socialism will deliver the working class but attacking veterans who signed up for service to the country - is not alienating at all.

Most indicted pols don't feel great heading into re-election.

McConnell is trying to establish a kangaroo court so the leader of his party is "acquitted" by GOP senators out to cover themselves for re-election - and he's complaining about process fairness? What a joke.

> Josh Holmes @HolmesJosh
> Bottom line - if the House refuses to move to a trial, they're dropping the case. It's a MUCH bigger win for @realDonaldTrump than an acquittal because it's an explicit admission they didn't have the goods to even present the discussion in front of anyone other than themselves

Tulsi Gabbard earned vitriolic backlash from the establishment for her sensible impeachment vote.

The attacks from @neeratanden, @cmclymer, etc. & hashtags like #TulsiCoward #TulsiIsARussianAsset are hateful and unsubstantiated.

In this survey of Democrats, over twice as many people support a plan that provides Medicare for anyone who wants it but maintains private insurance as support single payer M4A. 58% to 25%.

people would probably like it better if Democrats, especially on the debate stage, weren't making such disingenuous attacks on it. Private insurance, by and large, SUCKS.

Exactly. He doesn't want the last act to be impeachment. And if that's the case, McConnell should have a fair trial.

I sat in the audience, and just as the debate ended a number of people around me just spontaneously said Biden had his best night. I think his ending was particularly strong.

In real time, people seemed to score the Wine Cave moment for Buttigieg, bc he hit back with her campaign cash transfer.

But, admit it. Two hours later, you remember the wine cave. The trouble with hitting Warren on hypocrisy is that there's no one memorably bad fundraiser.

It seems a Republican campaign went to the houses of older Democrats, claimed to be officials, took their absentee ballots and got rid of them. The Republican "won" by 900 votes. It's 2018. Every major newspaper should be on that story. #NC9

B/c Dems in office aren't exactly inspiring people to vote. This is why it is so fundamentally important for Pelosi to start investigations. No more hand-wringing/ politics. You want Dems to vote? Show us it's worth it (I know it is, but a lot of ppl feel very disheartened)

Tell Pelosi to start firing towards her right. It seems like she enjoys firing to her left instead.

I've been saying for a while that if someone ran a spot saying "Jesus said 'love thy neighbor,' but Donald Trump does not," he could be triggered into attacking Christ.

"I've never heard of this Jesús character," said the President, using the Spanish pronunciation of the Christian religious figure's name.

According to senior Immigration and Customs Enforcement officials, Trump later asked ICE to determine whether Jesús was in the US legally.

Don't laugh. They need our help! They're hoping that there will be enough focus on their critical role in their home states so they can show they want a fair trial. Nancy knows so she trying to give them time to make their case.

Do you want to know a difference between the parties? 40% of the GOP has retired or lost their seat in Congress under Trump and the GOP Never talks about that. But some on the left still talk about Obama losing a 1000 local seats (tho Dems have already won well over 400 back).

> Interviews with current and former Republican lawmakers as well as party strategists, many of whom requested anonymity so as not to publicly cross the president, suggest that many elected officials are effectively faced with two choices. They can vote with their feet by retiring — and a remarkable 40 percent of Republican members of Congress have done so or have been defeated at the ballot box since Mr. Trump took office.

Guess what?

People who respond to polls aren't experts on effective policy.

In a country so rife with racism, I'd hope we would do what's right - not merely what's popular.

Let's elect a president who gets the difference.

If the Dems go to the centre, and do nothing more than chip at the edges of America's enormous systemic problems, which is all that a Biden or a Klobuchar would do, then nothing will change. In the UK, Labour's policies (Brexit aside) was not the issue.

The second reason voters gave in not voting for Labour was their economic policies would threaten growth. Their first reason was Corbyn.

Yes, hardcore Tories will always cite economics. It's not possible to win some people over. Corbyn himself was a big factor. So was Brexit. Polling shows that Labour's policies are enormously popular. Unfortunately the UK has lost it's damn mind and policies counted for little

Malarksist Revolutionary @agraybee · 33m
I love that when Democrats lose with razor-thin margins it's because they didn't have the policies that inspired the white working class, who all have a coherent populist agenda, but when Labour gets annihilated it's the voters' fault for being crazy.

In 2015, before Corbyn's leadership, Labour suffered one of its worst ever electoral defeats, getting 30% and losing its Scottish heartland. Just 2 years later, Labour won the biggest increase in its vote share since 1945, getting 40%, and depriving the Tories of their majority.

We can now say that Brexit is not the way to go. It was Corbyn compromising to the Blairite centrists, the British version of neoliberal Dems, that propelled his defeat along with a complete drubbing of the New Labour Blairites and the dissolution of the Lib Dem split-off party.
